"A nàimhde-san fa 'n cuairt."

Ross. Salm. xcvi. 3.

There is fire before him destructive, and great, proceeding in every direction, with which shall be burnt up in flames, his enemies round about. Est ignis ante illum vorax, ingens, progrediens in unquamque viâ, quo inflammabuntur cum flammâ, ejus hostes circa circum.

R, contr. for Ri, prep. q. vide.

"Bha uileann Dheir air slios, a sgéith,

"S e sruthadh dheur a sios r' a taobh."

S. D. 14.

Dargo's elbow leaned (was) on the edge of his shield while he poured tears down along its side. Fuit ulna Dargonis ad marginem sui scuti, et fundebat lachrymas deorsum ad ejus latus.

SA

S, THE fifteenth letter of the Gaelic alphabet: Irish, S, S, s, named "Sail," or "Suil," the Willow-tree: salix.

'S, contr. for Agus, q. vide.

"Bithidh m' astar an gorm-ghleann nan tonn,
"Gu carraig nan sonn 's nan scòd."

Carriethur. 41.

My course shall be in the blue valley of waves to the rock of warriors and heroes. Erit meum iter in carulea valle undarum, ad rupem bellatorum et heroum.

'S, contr. for Is, v. q. vide.

"'S mòr d' fhocal, nìic choigrich nan lam."
Carth. 118.

Great is thy word, son of the stranger of swords. Est magnum tuum verbum, fili advenæ gladiatorum.

'S, contr. for Anns, prep. q. vide.

"Bhual e ro' oidheche gu luath
"Gu sruth Thurthoir tha shuas 's a' chòs,
"S' na chuir e nighcan Thorcuil o thuath."

Cath. Lod. iii. 149.

He quickly proceeded through (the darkness of) night to the stream of Turtor that is upward in the cavern, in which he had placed the daughter of Torcul from the north. Iruit (percutsit) in noctem ocyis ad fluentem Turtoris quod est supra in caverna, in qua posuerat ille filiam Torculis à septentrione.

S', contr. for So, pron. q. vide. "'S na dùthchaibh s.'" Stew. 40. "i. e. Anns na dùthchaibh so."

In these countries. In his regionibus. S', when thus contracted for the pron. So, is commonly joined though incorrectly to the word preceding it.

S', contr. for Sa, et Se. Thu, Thus' i. e. Thu-sa. Mi, Mis', i. e. Mi-se. Iad, Iads', i. e. Iad-sa. Vide Seq.

SA, (i. e. So, pron.) An emphatic adjection, used with personal, and possessive pronouns, and verbs, and sometimes changing into "Se," when preceded by a small vowel. Its power is not equivalent to the English self, or own, or to the Latin -met, or ipse, being merely to restrict the meaning from general, to particular. Emphatica adjectio quedam pronomibus personalibus et possessivis, et verbis juncta, et in "Se," mutata, cum sequitur vocale e, vel i, in voce antecedente. Haud simile apud Latinos, Anglose invenire possumus quo in lingua utraque illorum designari liceat, nisi quod vox cui fit adjectio à sensu generali in speciem constringitur. 1. Joined to personal pronouns: cum pronomibus personalibus adhibetur. "Mi, Mi-se; Thu, Thu-sa; E. E-sa; I, I-se; Sibh, Sibh-se; Iad, Iad-sa.

SAB

Mi-se; i. e. Mi-so. I here: ego hic. Thu-sa, i. e. Thu-so. Thou here: tu hic. 2. Used with possessive pronouns, when, instead of immediately following the pronoun; it is annexed to its corresponding substantive noun. Cum pronomibus possessivis, et sic adhibutum, conjungi gaudet non pronomini ipsi, sed nomini cui concordat pronomem. "Mo cheann-sa." My head: meum caput. "Ann an tigh n' Athar-sa tha iomadh àite-còmh-nuidh." Eòin. xiv. 2. In my father's house are many mansions. In domo mei patris sunt multæ habitationes. 3. Used with verbs: cum verbis adhibetur. "Mar biodh e mar sin, dh'innsinn-sa dhuibh." Eòin. xiv. 2. If it were not so, I would have told you. Si non sic fuisset, edixissem vobis. The personal pronoun "Sinn," we: nos; and its corresponding possessive pronoun, "Ar," our: noster; instead of "Sa," or "Se," take "Na," et "Ne," as also do verbs, in the first person plural. Sa and Se, are also often changed into San, q. vide.

'SA, } contr. for Anns a', i. e. Anns, pref. et a', art.
'S A, } In the: in
'SA, }

"'S a' mhaduinn bidh iad mar am fear."

Salm. xc. 5.

In the morning they are as the grass. Manè sunt instar graminis. The two letters are commonly written, though improperly, in juxta-position.

'SA, contr. for Anns, prep. et A, poss. pron. q. vide.
SA, impr. for So, pron. q. vide. Stew. 256.

• Toiseadrach, -aich, s. m. alias, Toscheoderach, Toseachderach, Thossedraich, Toschachderach, &c. (Toiseach, et Dreuchd). A crowner, Mair of Fee, serjeant, or messenger: coronator, Marus Regis, serjandus, sive nuncius. "Primo, quod ille qui facit summonicionem nominet, in summonicione sua faciendâ, proprium suum nomen, cum nomine officii sui, et si fuerit Marus Domini Regis, vel Toseachderach [in M.S. Cromart. Toscederach] ipsius, vel aliquid aliud nomen officii pertinens ad summonicionem faciendam." Leg. Burg. M.S. This term, evidently Gaelic, compounded of "Toiseach," precedence, and "Dreuchd," an office, occurs as the name of an office in our ancient laws, Reg. Maj. Lib. 1. cap. 6. § 7. Lib. IV. cap. 2. § 3. Whatever was the nature of that office, various opinions regarding which are mentioned by Dr. Jamieson in his

Dictionary, under this word; Skene, in his note on the first cited of the passages above, in his Latin edition of our ancient laws, mentions it to have been "Barbarum nomen prisicis Scotis et Hybernis usitatum pro Serjando, vel serviente curiæ, qui literas citatorias mandat executioni:"—while under the same word, in his work De Verborum Significatione, he mentions it as an office, or jurisdiction, "not unlike an Bailliary," and adds, "specially in the Highlands and Isles." It is observable of this office, that such grants of it as had then been observed, were only known to have existed, either in the Highlands, or in districts where the Gaelic language is admitted to have been spoken. Two such grants had fallen under the observation of Skene himself: one, by David II. of the Toiseadrachship of the Earldom of Carrick, anciently a part of Galloway, where the Gaelic tongue long subsisted, noticed in his note on the first cited passage of the Reg. Maj.; the other, of the Toiseadrachship of Kintyre, dated 9th March, 1554, and noted in his treatise De Verb. Signif. A similar grant of the office for the district of Nithsdale is confirmed by a charter of Robert III., a district which Chalmers, in his Caledonia, Vol. iii. p. 60., advertising to that charter, observes, from its proximity to Galloway, to have early received an influx of Scotch-Irish settlers. Two other grants of this office, also in Highland districts, have been lately discovered, and put upon record: one by the Earl of Ross and Lord of the Isles, dated 20th April 1456, is of the Toiseadrachship of Lochaber; and another by the predecessor of the Dukes of Argyll, therein designed "Dominus de Loch-awè," of the Toiseadrachship of the district of Melford, and certain other lands, as therein particularly described. In this last, the remarkable permission, "prædas facere, vel guerras suffocare;" though seemingly a great concession of power, must be understood as merely signifying, to distract for fees and amerements; and to summon the king's rebels to lay down their arms.
